I am taking time away from Thanksgiving with my family to write to you about the importance of maintaining net neutrality. Allowing large companies to create different lane will not only hamper individuals' access to the sites they want (or require them to pay unnecessary fees), but it will hurt small and emerging businesses that use the internet to develop the new technologies that will move our economy forward into the future.

This is a bad decision for all Americans, especially those Americans living in rural areas already have far too limited access to quality high-speed internet, and this rule change would greatly reduce their ability to use the internet as they choose.

The change you propose would be bad for Americans. Please maintain the current regulations that respect personal liberty and support small businesses.

Thank you,
